

Banking on seamless transformation

Latour Capital invested in Sogeti for a speedy acquisition infrastructure transformation

The acquisition of Gutor Electronics meant setting the firm up as an independent entity, with modern apps and a whole new infrastructure, powered by Microsoft technology. And with over 700 user identities and digital workplaces to migrate as well, Latour needed on-time, on-budget, above-expectation delivery.

The infrastructure transformation was part of a push for modernization designed to make way for innovation and enable more seamless, modern working. With the complexity of a hybrid legacy environment to contend with, a custom Microsoft Azure Cloud infrastructure solution was designed and implemented, ahead of migration. Thanks to close collaboration, clear communication and bold decision-making, all user identities were up and running on the new system six months ahead of contract.

Sogeti delivered a comprehensive solution, skilled team onboarding, and a cloud environment designed with Azure services. This approach resulted in an independent IT environment, cost savings, and optimized resource utilization, enabling Gutor to focus on strategic initiatives.

“Embarking on a transformation project is a true adventure. For this, it is essential to find a versatile partner, capable of mobilizing the necessary skills and expertise in each specific field. This is precisely the added value of a company like Sogeti: offering 360-degree support to tackle such ambitious challenges.”

Eric Miralles,
CIO,
Latour Capital

LATOUR CAPITAL
OPERATIONAL EQUITY

sogeti
Part of Capgemini